

Farmers Markets

A strategic tool to develop resilient and sustainable local food systems

Wednesday 26 July, 13:30-14:30 (CET) – German Room- C269

Background and objectives

Local fresh food markets are key to deliver stability, to transform food systems for sustainability and resilience, and to implement the Sustainable Development Goals. Farmers markets build economic, social, and political links between urban and rural communities. The recurring and organised farmers markets not only stimulate the local economy, but also change consumer behaviour, create inclusive civic space, promote biodiversity, traditional knowledge whilst incubating entrepreneurial innovation. Our intention is to improve public policies and propose legislation, investment in infrastructure and programmatic capacities to facilitate food system transitions towards long-term sustainability and resilience.

Expected outcomes

With this event we intend to achieve a two-fold objective. The first is to build greater awareness of the farmers market model to deliver food security, food quality, and the protection of resources and communities. The second is to lay the foundations for constructive and long-term dialogue with national, regional and provincial governmental authorities for the implementation of food policies that support the organised development of farmers markets cities and towns as first steps to recalibrate the territorial social contract around local food systems that model multifunctional agriculture.
